Developing Resources to Help Youngsters

Since it was established in 1902, Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court has faced the challenge of a commitment to two goals: to serve the best interests of the youngsters of the community and to protect the rights and property of all citizens of the community.

Even in less complex times, the two goals were not easily balanced. As society and its legal structure have grown more complex, so has the task of serving both goals. Juvenile Court faced the beginning of the 1980's with the realization that its mission would be even further complicated by changes in the availability of resources to help it meet its goals.

Some community resources that have cooperated with the Court to help troubled youngsters and their families faced funding shortages that led to reductions in their services. Some of the Court's own sources of additional funding—the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, for example—were eliminated.

Fortunately, other new funding sources have so far been able to fill some of the Court's funding needs. Midyear, the Ohio Youth Commission instituted a Youth Services Grant program from which the Court received $805,428. With the grant, the Court partially funded the salaries of 31 social services staff members, increased the budget for private placement and foster care of youngsters and began plans for a number of new programs, including family therapy and victim/restitution services. The Court also directed a portion of the grant to Project Friendship, a "big sister" organization that works only with girls referred from the Court.

To meet the needs of the community and its youngsters, the Court continued to depend on a staff of 97 social services professionals, who work with youngsters and their families. In the early stages of the cases of children who are to appear in court, they gather information to prepare social histories that assist judges and referees in determining what treatment program suits each child's individual needs.

For children who are placed on probation, they plan treatment programs and provide supervision and counseling, meeting regularly with the youngsters assigned to them as well as with parents and school personnel. In addition to using their own skills to help youngsters resolve difficulties, they sometimes arrange for specialized services at community agencies.

A third of the social services staff operate from branch offices in Cleveland Heights, Glenville, Hough, the Near West Side, the Far West Side and Parma, rather than the Main Court. Working in branches located in areas where their probationers live, they can make more frequent contacts with youngsters, parents and schools. From the probationer's point of view, a probation officer whose office is only a few blocks away is a much more accessible source of help than one whose office is downtown.

Of course, not all children are placed on probation. Some need more intensive treatment and are temporarily placed outside their homes in closely supervised settings. Social services staff in the placement office work with children placed in private facilities and their families to help them adjust to the programs. When a child is ready to return home, the placement staff provide follow-up counseling to ease readjustment to the home.

Another social services unit, the custody review unit, monitors the placements of children. Within 60 days of a child's placement, an agency that receives custody must submit its plans to meet the child's needs and its plans for the future of the child to the custody review unit. Annual reviews are made until the case is closed or, in some instances, until the child is adopted.

Assisted by four groups of citizen volunteers, the custody review unit reviews the services and planning for each child and may recommend that the Court make changes if they are not in the best interests of a child.

The Court looks to its legal services staff to handle the work that is normally associated with the actual courtroom process but also to provide direction to clients who might be better served by other agencies.

Legal services staff process complaints, assign and schedule cases for the five judges and nine referees and maintain records of proceedings. Equally as important, they are responsible for advising complainants and youngsters charged with offenses of their legal rights. Units of the County Prosecutor's Office and the Public Defender's Office operate at the Court. Guardians Ad Litem are assigned to cases where a youngster's interests may conflict with the parents' interests.

In addition, the legal services staff help resolve many complaints before they become a part of the Court process by referring troubled youngsters and their parents to sources of help that may be more appropriate than Court intervention. They may also make in-house referrals to the Diversion Program or the unofficial referee.

The Court utilizes the Juvenile Detention Home as a temporary holding facility for youngsters who can't be released in parental custody before a Court appearance or for youngsters who have appeared in Court and are awaiting further planning or placement outside the home.

During their stays in the Detention Home, youngsters follow a carefully designed schedule of activities. They attend classes taught by teachers from the Cleveland Board of Education in classrooms in the Detention Home. They also participate in a physical education class, either inside the gym during colder weather or outside in a large courtyard during warmer weather. There is a daily planned activity period when they may choose to read, watch television, play table or board games, write letters or participate in special activities planned by the activities director. Of course, there are eating and sleeping periods and visits from parents, grandparents, probation officers, attorneys and clergy.

Detention Home referees screen all youngsters brought there from the outside. After considering police reports, charges and the child's record and interviewing the child, parents and an attorney, if requested, they hold only a limited number of children: those who are dangers to themselves or the community, those who have no homes and those who may not return for a court hearing.

As an alternative to secure detention, the Court began plans to use a Law Enforcement Assistance Administration grant for a home detention program to be activated in 1981. Some children who normally would be held in secure detention will be eligible for the program, which will allow them to remain at home pending Court appearances under the daily supervision of a home detention worker.

In making long-range plans from the viewpoint of 1980, Juvenile Court began to prepare to handle the problems of youngsters and the community with a greater variety of services. A Law Enforcement Assistance Administration grant to establish research capabilities for the Court began in 1980 and will help the Court accurately determine what services it most needs to develop and what changes it should make in existing services.

The grant provided funding for consultants from the National Center for Juvenile Justice in Pittsburgh to work with the Court for six months to determine its research needs, analyze its capacity for producing statistical information and set in place an ongoing research program. The initial research project is a study of the effectiveness of private placement in comparison to public placement and probation.

The completion of its computerization program allowed the Court to initiate the research grant. Processes such as the tabulation of the statistical tables at the end of this report and the compilation of dockets that for years were completed by hand now are computerized.

The quick and accurate availability of information and the ability to analyze that information will allow the Court to continue to serve the changing needs of the community and its youth who face increasingly difficult problems.

Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court instituted an important alternative to help some youngsters solve their problems when its Diversion Program began to handle cases in February 1980. The new program's overall goal is to provide immediate treatment intervention to change inappropriate behavior before it leads a child into more serious difficulties.

Diversion is not a new concept at Juvenile Court, but an in-house Diversion Program is. For a number of years, the Court has diverted cases to outside youth-serving agencies, but with its own program the Court can begin to help a troubled youngster on the same day that the case comes to the Court's attention.

Intake staff refer youngsters to the program when they feel its positive effects for the youngster and the community outweigh processing through the formal Juvenile Court system. To be eligible for referral, a youngster must have no prior official record with the Court and must be charged with no more than an unruly offense or misdemeanor.

Six social workers and a program supervisor, all of whom have advanced degrees and experience in working with troubled youngsters, staff the program. They provide individual, family and crisis counseling and arrange clinical services such as psychiatric and psychological evaluations and referrals to other social service agencies, when needed.

Although participation in the Diversion Program is voluntary, a youngster and at least one custodial parent must commit themselves to three to six months of active involvement. Those who break this agreement may then be subject to official processing by the Court for the original charge.

Counseling sessions are scheduled as often as necessary according to the needs of each individual case. They may be set for evening hours so that a youngster need not miss school to meet with a social worker and so that working parents can participate.

In reviewing the first year of operation, Jearlene Rogers, the program's supervisor, described the majority of referrals as "mainly cases of unruly youngsters, those who are out of control at home and defiant against family rules, those who have run away, who have school problems or who have problems relating to their parents. At the end of the year, we began to see some minor delinquencies such as shoplifting, and I think that we may begin servicing more of them in our second year."

At first, she said, she questioned whether such a counseling program could succeed in the official atmosphere of a court. "But there seems to be something comforting and reassuring to parents and youngsters about being here. We're now getting people who have heard about our program coming directly to us although we only accept cases that have been referred to us from the intake office where complaints are filed."

She attributed much of the program's positive beginning to the excellent relationship that has developed among her staff and between her staff and the intake staff. She also commended the staff's enthusiasm for developing the program. Of the cases handled in 1980, only five youngsters were adjudicated on new charges and only 24 were processed officially on the original charges. Over a longer time span, figures can more accurately validate the program's long-range effect in keeping youngsters from further trouble.

Benefits of the Diversion Program are wide-ranging. Youngsters who successfully complete the program have no official record at Juvenile Court, and their families develop better relationships. The Court benefits with a less crowded docket and lighter probation caseloads while the community benefits from savings in law enforcement, court and corrections costs and human resources.

The newly renovated Loew's Building on Playhouse Square became the permanent home of Juvenile Court's Child Support Department in 1980. Purchased by the Cuyahoga County Commissioners and remodeled in anticipation of considerable federal funding, the building provides much needed space for the Court's fastest growing department.

The upper three floors of the building, located at 1515 Euclid Avenue, hold the first two circular courtrooms in Cuyahoga County, four referee's hearing rooms, a cashier's office and office space for intake staff, a clerk's office, support counselors and administrative and clerical staff.

The Child Support Department has handled paternity and non-support cases since 1932, but a 1975 amendment to the Social Security Act has significantly increased the number of cases the department processes. That amendment, known as Title IV-D, requires Juvenile Court and the Cuyahoga County Welfare Department to try to locate an absent parent who may contribute to a child's financial support when a custodial parent applies for public assistance for the child.

Working cooperatively, Juvenile Court's Child Support Department and the Welfare Department hope to save taxpayers money by shifting the financial burden of child support away from the county and state. In 1980, the Welfare Department referred 4016 Title IV-D cases to the Child Support Department for processing.

In an era of federal funding cuts, James Papp, director of the Child Support Department, does not see this program as a target. "The enforcement of child support orders is much less costly than maintaining children on public assistance," he explains. Seventy-five percent of the cost of monitoring and enforcing Title IV-D cases is reimbursable through federal funds.

A paternity-child support case begins when a mother files charges in Juvenile Court, naming a defendant as the father of her child. The

Child Support Department: Relieving the Financial Burden

County Prosecutor's Office then represents her at a paternity hearing before one of three child support referees. If paternity is legally established, the referee sets the amount of support according to the needs of the child and the father's ability to pay. Failure to comply with the referee's order could result in a jail sentence.

In addition to the paternity-child support cases, the department also handles some support cases involving married couples with legitimate children.

Visiting judges conduct trials one or two weeks a month. In lieu of the legislature's creating two new judgeships for the Court, Juvenile Court Administrative Judge John J. Toner hopes eventually to add one or two permanent visiting judgeships to the Court to accommodate an increasing caseload.

Nearly 60 staff members are needed to keep cases flowing from intake through paternity and support hearings to monitoring of a regular support payment schedule. At the end of 1980, the department's counselors were responsible for the monitoring of 10,442 active cases.

Director Papp sees his department expanding even further in the next few years as it becomes, for practical purposes, more self-sufficient. Plans for enforcement hearings at the Loew's Building will eliminate trips between there and Juvenile Court's Main Building, where child support counselors must appear with clients for enforcement hearings. He also sees the addition of a clerk's office, an assignment office and a journal clerk's office to facilitate filing, docketing and journalization of cases.

In 1980 a total of 10,032 juvenile complaints were referred to the Court. Included in the complaints were 7,744 delinquency cases and 1,784 unruly cases, which were set for hearings, for a total of 9,528 accepted complaints. The additional 504 boys and girls were referred at intake to a newly established Court Division Project described elsewhere in this report and to the on-going Department of Youth Services Diversion Project. There were 402 children referred to the Court's Diversion Program and 102 referred to the Youth Services Diversion Project.

Data presented in the report, including the statistical tables, are based on the 9,528 cases processed for court hearings. Among boys' cases, injury to person showed a significant increase, from 775 cases in 1979 to 915 cases in 1980. In addition, arson charges increased from 86 in 1979 to 109 in 1980. The most frequent offense for boys was theft, which amounted to 1,456 cases, and the second most frequent offense was that of unlawful entry, which amounted to 1,101 cases. Drug and narcotic offenses declined from 306 in 1979 to 260 in 1980. There were seven fewer homicides regarding boys in 1980 than in 1979: 21 compared with 28 in 1979. Including four girls referred for homicides in 1980, the total for the year was 25, compared with 30 for 1979. Unruly complaints regarding boys, included: truancy, 266 cases; incorrigibility, 490 cases and running away, 42 cases. Total boys' cases amounted to 7,283 for the year.

A total of 2,245 girls' cases included 581 cases of theft and 599 cases of incorrigibility. Other girls' cases included: truancy, 231; running away, 75 cases and drug and narcotic offenses, which declined from 67 cases in 1979 to 36 cases in 1980. Injury to person offenses regarding girls increased from 233 in 1979 to 284 in 1980, as did arson charges, which numbered only one in 1979 to nine in 1980. (See Table 5 for Delinquency and Unruly Complaints for 1980 Compared with 1979.)

During the year the Probation Department supervised 5,522 children, 2902 of which were terminated during the year, carrying over 2,620 children under supervision as of January 1, 1981. Included in this total were 161 boys and girls placed in private residential treatment centers in 1980 under the supervision of the department's placement unit. Please note that the 52 placements recorded in Table 6, Dispositions, refer only to children placed regarding new complaints, with an additional 109 transferred to placement status from a previous probation status.

Commitments to public correctional schools declined from 854 in 1979 to 817 in 1980. These included: 608 boys and 53 girls committed to the Ohio Youth Commission, for a total of 661 to the Youth Commission, and 120 boys and 36 girls to the Youth Development Center, for a total of 156 to the Center. Please note that the 565 commitments recorded in Table 6 refer to commitments made regarding new complaints. The additional 252 commitments (total 817) were made regarding complaints of probation violations and violations of court orders.

Forty-six cases were transferred to the Adult Division of the Court of Common Pleas. These included 45 boys and one girl. Of the 2,000 cases disposed of on an unofficial basis, 1,414 were adjusted by referees at an informal hearing. (Please see Table 6 for Dispositions Made in Delinquency and Unruly Cases in 1980.)

The geographical distribution of cases continued the same pattern as for the past several years, with about 60 percent of the cases concerning children living in the City of Cleveland and 40 percent regarding children living in other areas of Cuyahoga County. There were 5,541 cases regarding children from Cleveland and 3,722 regarding children from other county areas. City of Cleveland social planning areas with a high frequency of reported cases included: the Near West Side, 567 cases; Glenville, 548 cases; Corlett, 536 cases; the Central Areas, 516 cases and Hough, 375 cases. Other county areas with a high frequency of reported cases included: Lakewood, 372 cases; East Cleveland, 330 cases; Cleveland Heights, 317 cases; Euclid, 295 cases and Parma, 287 cases. (Please see Table 1 for Delinquent and Unruly Complaints Filed by Area of Residence, 1980 and 1979.)

The Cleveland Police Department filed 2,533 complaints, for 27 percent of the total filings. Suburban police accounted for 32 percent of the total filings (3,057 cases). Other sources of complaints included, the Cleveland Board of Education, 472 cases; other county school boards, 388 cases; store security officers, 669 cases; social agencies, 148 cases; parents, 1,104 cases (nearly 12 percent of all filings) and citizens, 827 cases. (For a complete listing of the various sources of referral, see Table 2.)

In addition to the delinquency and unruly cases filed in the Court in 1980, other children's cases included: juvenile traffic cases, 10,064; neglected children's cases, 320; dependent children's cases, 333; applications to determine custody, 338, and applications for approval of permanent surrender, 13. Review of placement status for children placed out of their homes is under the supervision of the Court's custody review unit. In evaluating the placement status of dependent, neglected, delinquent and unruly children last year, the unit conducted approximately 900 initial reviews of new placements and more than 3,500 annual reviews of children previously placed. The unit's citizens custody review boards conducted 300 of the reviews.

Charges regarding adults amounted to 3,067. Included in these charges were 2,559 paternity complaints, 357 cases of non-support of minor children and 30 cases of contributing to the delinquency or unruliness of children.

New complaints of all types filed during the year amounted to 24,236 (21,169 children's cases and 3,067 adult cases). In addition, 4,048 alias complaints concerning previously disposed cases were filed for a grand total of 28,284 cases, a difference of 806 more cases than the 27,478 filed in 1979.

Judges and Court Administrator

1980 was a year of continuing progress and change at Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court.

From a physical standpoint, 1980 saw the completion of the remodeling of the Main Court Building, a nearly 50-year-old structure, which now offers more efficient and pleasant surroundings for our staff and the public. From a programmatic standpoint, it saw the inauguration of an in-house Diversion Program that successfully provided help for some 402 children and prevented the necessity of official court action. It also saw several new programs enter the planning stages with implementation set for 1981. Among them are family therapy, victim/restitution services and home detention.

Changes outside the Court affected us as well. At the state level, H.B. 695 became law in October 1980, providing for a planning process for the unification of families and/or the placement of children in permanent care. The state implemented a new subsidy program administered through the Ohio Youth Commission that will offer the possibility of funding for the expansion of programs, but it also announced the closing of several Ohio Youth Commission institutions that had previously been available to the Court.

It is our expectation that with the changes that have occurred, 1981 will be a year when new and innovative programs can again be implemented so that the needs of the children and families coming to the attention of the Court will be constructively resolved. The community has continued to provide us with the resources to meet this mandated obligation, and we hope it will help us to meet the challenges of a new year.
