TO: The Citizens of Cuyahoga County

The Honorable Geno Natalucci-Persichetti, Director
Ohio Department of Youth Services

The Honorable James Petro, Mary Boyle, and Timothy Hagan
Commissioners of Cuyahoga County

Ninety years ago the Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court opened its doors for business as the second court of its type in the country. In 1902 the major concerns facing families in the juvenile justice system were whiskey, poverty, and criminality. We are facing derivatives of these today: substance abuse, gangs and violent crime.

In 1992, the Court recorded 36,118 cases coming to its attention. This represented a reduction of 2.8% from 1991. The Court has not experienced a decline in total cases from a previous year since 1984. Delinquency cases demonstrated a slight decrease of 1.47% from 1991. Unruly cases coming to the attention of the Court increased by only .9%. Violent crimes such as homicide, assault, sex offenses, and robbery increased only .75% from 1991. However, violent crimes have quadrupled to 2,422 from only 626 ten years ago. Drug offense filings continue to rise; a 3% increase from 1991 and a 829% increase from 1987.

On April 1, 1992, Camp Roulston, a boot camp jointly initiated by the Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court and the North American Family Institute, accepted its first recruits. As a pilot boot camp for male juvenile offenders, Camp Roulston is one of only three sites selected by the federal government. Approximately 90 adjudicated delinquent male children who otherwise would have been committed to a state or county operated correctional facility attended Camp Roulston this year.

A child's eligibility to participate in the boot camp program is determined by Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court. The North American Family Institute operates the 90 day residential phase of the program which blends military discipline and social service. Ten children per month enter Camp Roulston with a maximum at any given time of 30. Intensive, community-based aftercare services, also administered by North American Family Institute, are provided for up to 8 months.

The federal government provided 52% of the total funds to develop and implement the boot camp. The remaining funds were contributed by the Ohio Department of Youth Services. The County contributed land, facilities, equipment, and medical and food services. Rutgers University and the American Institutes for Research are evaluating the effectiveness of the program. Camp Roulston is located on the grounds of the county-operated Youth Development Center and is named in honor of Thomas Roulston, Sr., a juvenile justice advocate.

Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court maintains the reputation as the largest metropolitan juvenile court in the country with an accredited Probation Department and Detention Center. Both are accredited by the American Correctional Association (ACA). On January 20th, the ACA unanimously voted to reaccredit the Court's Probation Department. Originally accredited three years ago, the department had to prove compliance with 228 standards developed by national correction professionals. After a three day audit, the department received an outstanding score of 99.37% from the ACA. The Probation Department and Court staff involved with the reaccreditation process are to be commended.

The Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court Detention Center continues to present concerns. In April, a population limit of 175 children per day was put into effect. The average annual daily population was 146.4, a 7.5% increase over last year. Alternatives to secure detention are also strained, including Home Detention and Sheltercare. The Court is in the process of developing a system to further limit the population of the Detention Center. As an ACA accredited facility, certain standards must be maintained and efforts are being made to accomplish this. Child safety and security, staff safety, education, and concerns about the quality of life continue to be major issues. With the blessing of the county commissioners, the search is underway for a location for a new detention center.

The Court has served Cuyahoga County children and families for over 90 years (1902-1992). However, the concept of a juvenile court began much earlier. This year's annual report traces the development of this concept and highlights the Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court from its conception.

In compliance with Ohio Revised Code Section 2151.18, I submit the 1992 Annual Report of the Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court, which shows the number and kinds of cases, the dispositions and other data pertaining to the work of the Court.

Respectfully,

Leodis Harris, Administrative Judge
Court of Common Pleas, Juvenile Division
Cleveland, Ohio

2. History

Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court — The Beginning

As early as the 10th Century in England, attempts were made to reform juvenile offenders and to treat them differently from adult offenders. However, there are few records of children who were actually accorded this privilege. As late as the 17th and 18th centuries, children as young as eight years old were condemned to death for setting fires, stealing or vandalism. By the mid-1800's, the world began to recognize the importance of differentiating the method of trying an adult criminal from that of a juvenile offender.

England and Switzerland were the first countries to enact legislation providing for separate trials for juveniles. However, the idea of a "juvenile court," a separate court system for juveniles, is an American concept. The historical era of the late 19th century in which the juvenile court concept emerged in the United States was marked by widespread social change and unrest. Immigration, industrialization, and urbanization combined to create a society of turmoil, one in which established values and institutions were incapable of supporting a developing social structure.

At first there was no move to modify court procedure or to prevent the conviction of a child. The idea that following conviction a child should be kept confined apart from adult criminals was finally adopted. This concept gave rise to the juvenile reformatories, the first of which was founded in 1825. Many states followed suit and established various types of institutions to house convicted children. Their aims were correction and education. However, in most cases children were still treated in the adult criminal process and sent to city or county jails. Soon after the Civil War, questions began to arise concerning the effectiveness and legal precedent of reform schools for children. The reform schools provided for the separation of delinquent children from their natural parents and circumvented the rigors of the criminal law by allowing the courts to commit children, under loosely worded statutes, to specially created 'schools' instead of jails.

The earliest steps to modify the court procedure in children's cases did not occur until the 1870's. Under a Massachusetts law in 1869 the presence of a representative of the state board of charity was required in juvenile court cases. Separate hearings were authorized in the Boston area by a law enacted in 1870. In 1872, a law authorized the governor to designate and commission a 'trial justice of juvenile offenders.'

In Cleveland, conditions were not more deplorable than those in other major cities of the United States in the early 20th Century. The city and surrounding Cuyahoga County were experiencing growth and expansion. Cleveland was becoming a leader in the manufacturing of hardware, paints, sewing machines and astronomical instruments. The city's residents were enjoying days at the Glenville racetrack and Euclid Beach, a new amusement park which had just opened its doors. Despite this growth, some community leaders became concerned about the conditions of children in local prisons. In 1901, Newton D. Baker, then Assistant Law Director in Cleveland during Mayor Tom L. Johnson's administration, and Glen K. Shurtleff, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA), studied the unfavorable conditions of children in county jails. Baker and Shurtleff found that few concessions were made in favor of the youthful offender. Adolescent boys were often confined in intimate contact with hardened adult criminals; young girls were held in the same quarters as adult female prostitutes. Baker presented these findings to the Bar Association and to the YMCA's Social Service Club. The Social Service Club, comprised of young men in their early twenties including Baker and Shurtleff, combined with the Bar Association and an associated charities committee to lay the foundation for a juvenile court in Cleveland.

In fall, 1901, Thomas E. Callaghan, elected judge of the Insolvency Court created in 1897, became interested in the juvenile court movement. Together with Baker, Shurtleff and the added interest of the Chamber of Commerce, he encouraged the introduction of a bill in the Ohio State legislature for the creation of a juvenile court for Cleveland and Cuyahoga County. Senator John French Herrick introduced the bill and guided its passage through the legislative process. Herrick, a Civil War Colonel, commanded troops assigned to protect Johnson Island, a confederate prison in Ohio, from Confederate attack, and Ohio's 12th Calvary, which aided in the capture of Confederate President Jefferson Davis. He was elected to the Ohio Senate in 1901. The bill was based in part on a similar bill passed by the Illinois state legislature on July 1, 1899, which created the Chicago Juvenile Court, officially called the Juvenile Court of Cook County. The Ohio bill established the juvenile court in the jurisdiction of insolvency court and only in cities with a minimum population of 380,000 (1900 U.S. census). Cleveland was the only Ohio city to match the requirement. The bill provided for a "juvenile record," a separate book of juvenile cases, and provided that any person interested may demand a jury of six. Jurisdiction was limited to children age 16 and under. At the time of the bill's passage probation officers were to be unpaid volunteers of good character. The bill also stipulated that children under the age of 12 may not be committed to jail and insisted that parents pay for the care of their children. The bill was passed on April 18, 1902, and enacted on May 1, 1902, almost one year prior to the creation of the Denver Juvenile Court in 1903. Thus the Cuyahoga County Juvenile Court became Ohio's first and America's second juvenile court.
